UK Outlook for Thursday 1 Jul 2021 to Saturday 10 Jul 2021:
Likely a fine and dry day for most on Thursday, although expecting increasingly large amounts of cloud inland initially, gradually burning back to the coast by day. Any showery rain will likely be confined to southeasternmost areas, but the odd heavier burst remains possible. Winds mostly light, and feeling warm or vary warm for most. Confidence is then lower, but the country is most likely to see a split between the southwest and northeast, with southern and western parts seeing some showers, and perhaps longer spells of rain, with the best of any dry weather across the north and east. Temps are likely to trend above normal, notably across some parts of the northeast. Winds remaining light to moderate for most, though possibly strong in the west at times.
